

THE WALTHAMSTOW MURDERS.

Mr George H. Savage, M.D., physician at Bethlehem Hospital, feels it his duty to write about the case of William Gouldstone, who has just been convicted of the murder of his children. Justice, says Dr. Savage, demands further investigation of the case. After urging arguments in favour of the prisoner's insanity, Dr. Savage expresses a hope that the prisoner will not suffer the penalty of death.

The following letter, signed by William Graves, foreman, for himself and his fellow-workmen, appears in the Daily Telegraph:—We, being all the men who work in the smiths' shop in which William Gouldstone was employed, unhesitatingly say that he was of unsound mind when he committed the murder. We base this opinion upon the intimate daily intercourse we have had with him during the last four years and a half, and we consider it a great hardship that we were not allowed to put this evidence before the jury. Had we had any doubt on the subject we should not have taken up his case as we have done. We should be grateful if you would make this, our opinion, known to the public.
